Revolutionary England

The apothegm that the theory of to-day is the practice of to-morrow finds a remarkable illustration of its truth in the present political condition of England. Thirty six years ago the whole strength of the government was directed to the suppression of the Chartists. The organization, thus called, simply demanded five concessions from the government, viz manhood suffrage, vote by ballot, abolition of the property qualification for members of parliament salaried representatives in parliament, and equal election districts. The demand led to a perfect state of terrorism among the ruling classes. 'roops were kept in readiness in all the large cities to suppress any demonstration of chartism. Special constables were sworn in all over the kingdom. The country was practically placed in a state of siege when, in 1848, the organizers of the chartist movement announced their intention of march ing to the parliament houses with a mammoth petition, and the Duke of Wellington, then commander in chief of her majesty's forces, stationed troops in the Bank of England and at all the assailable points of London ready to quell the mob. "The trail of the four-pounder" was his panaces for all political agitation, and he took care to have the remedy in readi-

To-day, out of the famous "five points of the charter," two have been gained absolutely, and two of the other three are in a fair way of accomplishment. The ballot was adopted in 1872 without wrecking empire; property qualification for members of parliament has been abolished, and manhood suffrage is within a short step of becoming the law. The present ministry is now prepar-ing a measure which will give the last mentioned claim full effect when it is completed, as it will undoubtedly be during the present session of parliament. And none of these changes, which would have been considered utterly destructive thirty years ago, seem to have wou he any appreciable injury to the imperial

With regard to the other points. the plan to pay salaries to legislators is hardly likely to go into effect for many years to come, nor at all while men are to be found who will slave a lifetime to accumulate wealth and prestige sufficient to afford them the privilege of paying for an election The Englishman works to win the wealth and fame that will give him tas prestige; the American works to get into our legislature to make wealth or fame after he has got there. As to the demand for equal election districts, that will be unlikely to occur at all, mainly becase the people who demand it have learned that in

We see approaching an election of most vited import to our commonwealth in all its interests, both public and private.

Deeming honesty the best policy, and in striking contrast with the course of the opposition party, we have named an early day for the assembling of the state convention. Our principles as a party will then be enunciated, and our candidates placed in the field subject to the approval or consideration of the body politic.
